TEAPOT OIL LEASE WON BY COMPLOT, IS BONFILS CHARGE

Senate Hears Editor Link Big Companies in Conspiracy to Assure Sinclair Award

Mr. Lenroot Seeks to Establish Contracts Were Made to Silence Denver Post

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9 (P)—A charge that Harry F. Sinclair, E. L. Doheny and "the Standard Oil allied companies" conspired to assure award of the Teapot Dome naval oil lease to Mr. Sinclair was made shefore the Senate oil committee today by Fred-erick G. Bonfils, publisher of the Denver Post.

Continuing his story of his connection with the group that held contesting claims in the Teapot reserve and disposed of them to Mr. Sinclair, the publisher asserted that in addition to the payments made to that group, the Midwest and Pioneer companies, who also had interests in this district, received $1,000,000 in ofl produced by the Sinclair company from Teapot.

Conspiracy Alleged. Replying to questions by Thomas J. Walsh (D.), Senator from Mon-tana, Mr. Bonfils said that "there was conspiracy between Doheny and Sinclair and the Standard Oil allied companies to let Sinclair have the Teapot Dome as far as they were concerned." He added:

They having no antagonistic interests in California, they had no objection to letting Mr. Dobreny have the naval reserve there and they went into the agreement along these lines and the leases were granted.

The West Midwest and Pioneer got $1,000,000 in oil produced by Sinclair Company on the Teapot Dome. That I have confirmed.

The feeling with Sinclair was not friendly to Mr. Stack (J. Leo Stack, one of those associated with Mr. Borifiels). They treated him like an office boy, and thought they could settle with him on any terms agreeable to them.

The Pioneer company kept telling him to settle with Sinclair and to take whatever he would give him.

During his testimony yesterday the witness had said that he and Mr. Stack, a Denver oil man, with H. H. Tammen, his partner, and H. H. Schwartz, their attorney, negotiated a settlement with Mr. Sinclair, the proceeds of which were "snilt four ways" ceeds of which were "split four ways."
This settlement, he said, took place after the Post had published an article attacking the Teapot Dome situation. but had deferred publication of other stories on the same subject because of a fear of the lenter.

Today Mr. Bonfils vigorously denied that the attitude of his newspaper that the attitude of his newspaper toward Mr. Sinclair had anything to do with the contract of the settlement. In the midst of a cross-examination, Irwin L. Lenroot (R.), Senator from Wisconsin, asked whether "the matter of your attack on Sinclair" was discussed at the conference with Mr. cussed at the conference with Mr.

"No, sir," Mr. Bonfils replied. "Was the matter of your ceasing your attacks on Sinclair, discussed?" "I would like to know what instigated these questions. Did they emanate from Colorado?"

"Shocking Disclosures"

Referring to the sending of a re-porter to New Mexico, Mr. Lenroot asked whether Mr. Bonfils, who yesasked whether Mr. Bonfils, who yes-terday had described the disclosures brought back as "shocking," had failed to print the articles merely because of the possibility of libel suits. Mr. Bon-fils replied in the affirmative.

"That is not true."
"But that this whole deal was for the purpose of purchasing your silence in your newspapers?"

Further protest against the Schick test, as the result of which 44 Concord and Bridgewater public school pupils are confined to their beds, was recorded today. It is particularly emphasized that recorded today. It is particularly emphasized that parents who are allowing their children to be submitted to it, are doing so on the mere opinion of medical men who disagree among themselves and are far from being certain of its effects.

This adverse sentiment, however, appears to be having little effect on the Boston School Committee, which, having Schinck-tested some 1500 public school children, proposes to apply the second step of the treatment Monday to any of those who show reaction to the first test. The so-called immunication process consists of inimmunization process consists of in-oculation of the child with what is known as the Behring serum.

Mr. Shea, who is a manual treatment practitioner, yesterday inserted the following advertisement which appeared in a Boston newspaper this morning:

One of the first results which the completion of the Boulder Dam and all-American canal, as called for in the Swing-Johnson bill, would bring to the southwest would be to octuple the purchases which this section makes of the east and middle west. The harnessing of the Colorado River, as called for in this proposed legislaas called for in this proposed legisla-tion, will in no way make harder the ot of the farmer in any part of the country through added competition, but will be a positive benefit in siding the sale of his product.

It must be remembered that climatic conditions are such in the southwest that the crops of economic value which are raised are specialized crops, such as citrus fruits. The high cost of reclaimed land, combined with the cost of irrigating, requires that products must be of such a character or grow at such a time of year that they command a high price.

Imperial Valley ships to the eastern states large quantities of lettuce, making its profit by reason of the fact that it is grown out of season, and in no way competing with the lettuc of middle western farmers, nor aftering its price. The same is true of the meions of this section and to a degree of the cotton, which is long staple, and competes with the south is long staple, and competes with Egypt rather than with the south. # WOMEN CRUSADING FOR EQUAL RIGHTS

Woman's Party Secretary Cites Reasons Why Constitutional Amendment Is Sought

With the purpose of "removing all existing forms of the subjection of women." the National Woman's Party has started a nation-wide campaign for an equal rights amendment to the Constitution. Anita Pollitzer, national secretary of the party argued the case for the proposed amendment yesterday afternoon in a meeting at the home of Mrs. Langdon Frothingham, and on next Thursday a large delegation of New England women will see President Coolidge in an effort to win his indorsement. In the debate yesterday afternoon the opposition to the amendment was represented by B. Loring Young, Speaker of the Massachusetts House of Representatives.

of Representatives.

"We are not blaming the men for the glaring discriminations that exist in the United States against us." Miss Pollitzer said. "If this fight is not won it is our own fault. It is our night and we are out to win it ourselves. When Susan B. Anthony, in 1878, introduced the first proposal for a Woman Suffrage amendment she had no support. There was no organization behind her and few women with her. But the fight she began years before was carried through because it was right. This equal rights amendment is a further step in the same direction, and a continuation of same direction, and a continuation of the same fight."

TAX-EXEMPT SECURITY ISSUES TEMPT MUNICIPAL BANKRUPTCY

Herman A. Metz Analyzes Proposed Tax-Reform Measure—Debt Charges Become Heavy Burden

Taxpayers see a vital point in the question asked by Andrew W. Mellon, Secretary of the United States Treasurs "Should a system of taxation that permits a man with income of $1,000,000 a year to pay not one cent to the support of his Government remain unaltered?" The argument has been advanced that tax-exempt bonds, of which $12,300,000,000 are affoat cannot be taxed, although the Sixteenth Amendment reads: "Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived." Rather than attempt to retrace steps, a bill is before Congress for another constitutional amendment to limit further issues. Tax-exempts make it easier for governments to run up debt, yet they pay nothing directly to the expense they increase. Special attention is being given to taxation in The Christian Science Monitor.

Special from Monitor Bureau ' practical men recently called into conference by William R. Green, chairman, James R. Frear and other members of the House Ways and Means Committee, about the new tax legislation just submitted to Congress, Herman A. Metz, former comptroller of the city of New York, who has been called to Washington, is especially competent to advise on the problem of nicipal and national revenue.

micipal and national revenue.

Mr. Metz was chief financial authority for New York City between 1906 and 1910 when, largely at his insistence, the present method of determining the borrowing capacity of New York City was fixed by the courts and is now accorded by reactically all and is now accepted by practically all American municipalities. He is a successful business man, being president of the chemical and dyestuffs manufacturing firm of Her-man Metz & Co., and to his understanding of the business investor's point of view, he adds also experience as a lawmaker through service in Congress as former Democratic Rep-Congress as former Democratic Representative for the tenth New York district and as the responsible head of a spending public department, both as former member of the Brooklyn Board of Education and Commissioner of Charities for the New York State government at Albany.

Tabulation of Tax-Exempts

He was also chairman of the com-mittee on nonpartisan facts of the Institute for Public Service in New York which first brought to the at-York which first brought to the at-tention of the country a little ever a year ago the extent in carefully tabulated figures to which the $12,-209,000,000 now outstanding in tax-exempt securities were burdening future generations and tempting bank-ruptcy by extravagant municipal finance.

From his long experience in these several responsible contacts with the tax-exempt security question, Mr. Metz has provided The Christian Science Monitor with an analysis of the present tax-reform proposal from the point of view of the municipality, of the fax-paying public and of the fax-paying the present tax-reform proposal from the point of view of the municipality, of the tax-paying public, and of the business man and investor.

As regards the municipality, Mr. Metz declares that the point which seems to have escaped most of the comment of the public in the matter of city borrowing is the very large proportion of municipal expenses American cities have to pay at the present time for the single item of debt charges, which have in part been the posts.

Debt Service Charge

In New York we spend, roughly speaking, a third of our total budget for that purpose. About $100,000,000 goes for school maintenance, about $100,000,000 more for the remainder of the expenses of actually running the city, and $100,000,000 more for debt city, and $100,000,000 more for deciservice. This proportion has not decreased, but has actually increased during the last 15 years. In 1908 it cost about $150,000,000 to run New York, and the debt service was then about $45,000,000, schools costing about the same amount, leaving some $60,000,000 for actually administering the elty.

It is perfectly clear, if one looks at the different proportions of these two figures, to how great an extent the inducement to shift the burden of borrowing on future taxpayers has increased the wholly unprofitable.

Chlonel Haskell Says Failure of United States Is Delaying Sound Democracy

"Recognition of Russia by Great evolution of the Russian Government to a genuinely democratic system. The failure of the United States to recognize Russia serves, I believe, to delay that evolution." These conclusions, expressed by Col. William N. Haskell, for three years director of the American Relief Administration in Russia, represent a more intimate knowledge of the actual situation in post-war Russia than that possessed, probably, by any other American. Col. Haskell spoke this noon before the Foreign Policy Association at the Control of knowledge of the actual situation in post-war Russia than that possessed, probably, by any other American. Col. Haskell spoke this noon before the Foreign Policy Association at the Copley-Plaza Hofel, Boston. Other speakers on Russia this noon included George Somaripa and V. N. Kivobok, Russian students at Harvard University.

University.

"Communism has gone by the boards in Russia," Colonel Haskell declared this morning to a representative of The Christian Science Monitor. "When I first went into Russia everyone was on ration, workers rode free on the trains and streat cars, the surplus of crops and industry was taken over by the Government, pooled and given to those who needed them. Now all that has passed. There is not a vestige of communism. Farmers keep their surplus. Workers are paid a wage. Food is no longer rationed, but purchased in the stores as in America."

When asked whether or not, during the years just past, conditions had declared:

There is no comparison. In the days when I first went into Russia conditions were chaotic. Railroads did not run on schedule, people were inadequately supplied with food and clothing, municipal organization was in disorder. Now all that is changed. Streets are well lighted, throughout their entire length. Shop windows are much like shop windows in this country. Production has igcreased enormously, since communism was abandoned and a new Russia, actually, is being developed.

is being developed.

As for the Communists, Colonel Haskell said:

Haskell said:

I believe that, though there are many Communists in theory in Russia still, the bulk of the Communists have totally abandoned this system so far as actual practice is concerned. In regard to the Third International, it is sort of a poor relation of the Government in Russia. I think they would be jolly well glad to see it moved to Amsterdam. It is an embarrassment to them. And it is exceedingly unlikely that, since the Government is interested in recognition by the powers, it is actively

Haskell said. "The present Government is absolutely sincere. It is endeavoring, by wider education and greater justice, to carry out the will of the Russian people. It is doing it infinitely better than the old Government ever did. To say that the Czarists of the old element will ever return is as ridiculous as to say that return is as ridiculous as to say that there is a possibility of the King of England establishing himself as monarch in the United States."

Wayside Inn May See Revival of the Minuet

The old-fashioned ballroom of the famous Wayside Inn at Sudbury has seen dancing parties that became famous in the social history of the countryside in days celebrated by the New England poets. With an informal suggestion that With an informal suggestion that certain urgent betterments be made in the present system of marking grades of students in schools and colleges, Frederick A. Tupper of the Brighton High School, president of the eastern Massachusetts section of the Classical Association of New England, opened the conference at Harvard University this morning.

Mr. Tupper said he believed the present method of marking to be de-structive to the highest aims of schol-arship. He explained that it is wrong to give students the feeling of success because of the conventional system of marking when their actual work does not warrant such security. The re-marks were made purely unofficially and were embodied in his welcome to the section, meeting in joint session with the Classical Club of Boston. The association was organized in 1906 and shares in the Classical Journal, the publication fostering the interest of the classical associations of the mid-

For those who, like myself, can stand up and make good this denial, it is not so important, but particularly do I resent the insinuation that because the late Franklin K. What I have done was within my rights as a lawyer. In my representation of the Doheny companies in Mexican matters I never dealt in political influence, nor did I ask or promise, or give or receive, political favors, or other favors. If my conduct in acting professionally in these matters is open to criticism, then no lawyer can take a Cabinet office unless he be rich enough to give up all professional employment in business when he comes out of office. I do not believe that any such standard is wise or proper. I believe that the spirit of fair play of the honest-minded American people will not misunderstand my course in this matter, not take their minds off of those who are guilty of betraying their trust as disclosed in this investigation.

We hold this sale because, year after year, it is so successful we have reason to believe we are giving our customers a service they appreciate. Ordinarily we would not be justified, perhaps, in selling merchandise to be paid for in eight months. But, when we originated the event many years ago, the reason for the postponed feature was that we were inviting our customers to buy their furs at the end of the season—many months, as a rule, before they would think of purchasing. We found high-grade fur makers unable to sell their stocks of beautiful furs, as retail stores generally were ending their season, and not willing to buy. The fur makers, therefore, turned to us, offering big price concessions. And so we proved, year after year, that customers who bought furs in our advance sales naved money because the prices the following fur season naturally were much higher.

The sale has grown in reputation and volume because we have never failed to save money for our customers.

The underlying conditions this year are unusually favorable for our customers. The season has been abnormally warm and classed as "backward." We have secured wonderful values in furs of beautiful color and of high-grade, expertly selected pelts.

Our friends may not only save money compared to prices that probably will prevail next Fall, but they may enjoy wearing their furs for the balance of the present season, and pay only when they would naturally pay-next October. As usual all sales are considered final.

United States and in its heyday one of the most influential in New Engliand, finds itself without a home. The Frankin Building, on Washington Square, which it has occupied for nearly 100 years, is about to be razed to make way for a modern hotel.

The Frankin Building is one of Salem's landmarks. Built in 1810, it was for many years the largest building in the town. In 1830 it became the property of the Salem Marine Society, under the will of Thomas Perkins, 'on, condition that the said Marine Society shall annually apply the net rents and profits thereof to the relief of such Poor and Indigent Members of said Society, who may not be given to excessive drinking, as shall be annually designated by the Officers of the said Society for the time being.'

The Salem Marine Society has celebrated its one hundredth and one hundred and fittieth anniversaries. Instituted in 1766 and incorporated in 1771, it is, with the exception of the Boston Marine Society, the oldest organization of its kind in the United States. Its original purpose, as set forth in the petition for act of incorporation, was to raise a "Fund wherewith to relieve such of their Members as through Misfortune at Sea, or otherwise, stand in Need of Relief; and also to communicate in Writing, to be lodged with the Society, the Observations they make at Sea of any Matters which may render Navigation, particularly on this Coast, easier &

Abbott Graves' Paintings

Abbott Graves' paintings of American gardens, on view at the Vose Gallerios, take us out of doors, for a change, to see the beauty of flowers in their nat-ural surroundings. There is somesee the beauty of flowers in their natural surroundings. There is something more than the beauty of form and color of still life. The artist prefers to paint the flowers as they grow; to get their relationship to nature. And so, he is concerned with the growth of trees and bushes and their blooming. There is no isolation or subordination of the details of nature. He paints the ensemble, one complete impression of solid growth. Even the persons in the pictures are painted in the decorative terms of the landscape.

In subjects like "Iris and Gold." the artist works out a scheme on/a certain theme of color, violet and yellow.

It is for these reasons that the Swing-Johnson bill is the concern of the entire United States—not merely of the farmers of imperial Valley, who will receive much of the water made available by the high dam at Boulder Cafion. Increased water supply, iflood control and a great new block of hydroelectric power will mean a great increase of population in the region immediately affected, and consequently, an increased wealth to the country at large.

Figured at $1500 an acrs a year, a conservative estimate of the crop value created by the project, the Boulder Dam would mean the addition of some $275,000,000 a year to the agricultural wealth of the Nation. Since competition with other sections is eliminated from this project, and since the sale of electric current will soon repay the Federal Government for all it puts into it, no better investment could be made by Congress than authorization of work on a dam at Boulder Cafion on the Colerado.

SHOE WORKERS STAY AT THEIR BENCHES

HAVERHILL, Mass., Feb. 9 (Special) Despite the action of the joint shoe council of the Shoe Workers' Protective Union that the shoe worker should not work longer than 10 o'clock Saturday forencons, pending a settlement of the question of hours of labor, many of the workers today remained at their places until 11:50, the hour set by the manufacturers for stopping work. Austin E. Gill, general agent of the union, today said that he would recommend that the question of hours be arbitrated, and the recommendation was received by the council at its meeting this afternoon. The joint shoe council had previously voted to delay a decision in the matter of arbitrating this point until after the selection of the neutral arbiter. Now that the union's candidate for arbitratics is chosen, it is believed that the hour question will be a subject for arbitration. Union that the shoe worker should no

TEMPT MUNICIPAL BANKRUPTCY

If New York has been extravagant with all these safeguards, the experience of smaller communities has ence of smaller communities has ahown that a still more serious situation exists in other cities through the favored position of tax-exempt securities in the present artificially ready market for them.

Every bond-seiling house is ready to put any municipal bond on the market with local security behind it, with the added value of tax exemption, and the mail of every business man is swamped with such applications daily. The estimate of only $1.000.000,000 worth of tax-exempt securities being issued yesterday is conservative; it is substantially over that. Many of these towns are going to be caught eventually with a lien on their real estate, for it is a positive fact that in the rush to get on the market, and the hospitality afforded them by bond-selling houses,

Industriale Betterment

The remedy is not, however, to tax municipals, but to condense the market by providing an inducement, for capital to go into industrial channels, and thus restore compatition between such normal municipal bonds as those of New York, producing about 4.20 per cent and the 7 per cent industrials, which are the normal investment of profit-seeking capital.

As things are at present, the dollar is seeking its own level; with the existing surtax a 4% per cent municipal is as profitable an investment as ordinary 10 per cent industrials, which are relatively scarce, having in mind an equivalent security. By reducing the surtax by enough to induce capital to resume its investment in the normal if per cent industrials, however this may affect industry or the yield of federal tax, it will certainly there amost healthy effect on American cities. It will stop effect-utally-their wildcat financing; and the same applies to county and state issues as well.

The varying quotations on state bonds in Kansas, Missachusetts, Illinois, and other states are evidence.

sues as well.

The varying quotations on state bonds in Kansas, Massachusetts, Illinois, and other states are evidence to any investor that this condition of things is not normal. The remedy is to make the municipal bond meet a normal market; that is the quickest and the surest way to discourage the present dangerous development in municipal inflation.

Just what the position of the tax-payer would be, according to Mr. Metz, in the face of an impost on municipal bonds as a more drastic measure to diminish their circulation will be told in a succeeding article.

ITALY EXAMINES GUILD SOCIALISM

Dictator's Economic Experiment a Serious Bid for Permanent Industrial Peace

FLORENCE, Jan. 20 (Special Cor respondence)—Comparatively recently Benito Mussolini, Italy's dictator, in one of his public talks, delivered an apothéosis on capitalism. He declared that capitalism was necesdeclared that capitalism was necessary for the peaceful and economical production of wealth, and, practically, that industry could not survive without it. This was a slap at the Communists, who, though they have been suppressed as a party, are in some sections of Italy a considerable part sections of Italy a considerable part of the working population.

Still, while Mussolini is extolling capitalism, he is not content to give it free rein. He has appointed a commission to take control of the Italian labor situation, which is expected to curb labor unions in their demands on employers as to wages and hours, and employers as well who will not be permitted to cut wages, lengthen hours, or do those other things to their employees which result in strikes and disorder.

Experiment in Guild Socialism

The initial stages of the Mussolini program have been already worked out, is the announcement. On the one out, is the announcement. On the one hand there is to be a Fascist trade corporation, with its separate organizations of agricultural unions or syndicates, and on the other, a labor organization, which is defined as guild socialism, where employers, called by the familiar name of "captains of industry," co-operate with employees in working out the problems that from time to time arise wherever one class owns the means wherever one class owns the means of employment and the other class do or employment and the other class do the necessary manual work.

Naturally what is being attempted is called an "experiment." But it has this advantage over former experiments in trying to solve the problems of Capital's dealing with Labor, in that it accentuates the personal equation, instead of submerging the individual worker into the mass he is powerless to protect himself from exploitation.

No Price Too High For Peace

Here is the Mussolini postulate: Capitalism will commit suicide if it bears on Labor with more than a given weight. The worker must be paid a sufficient wage to enable him to live in the manner to which his class is accustomed. And, on the other hand, the worker must not endeavor to force the employing class to pay a higher wage than the demand for goods can bear; this demand being regulated by competition between manufacturers for a market. On no account whatever, Signor

Mussolini is reported to have said at the recent meeting of the Fascist Fascist Workers' Corporation and the General Workers' Corporation and the General Federation of Italian Industries at the Palazzo Chigi, will the Government allow the present peace in Italy between the employers and employees to be broken. It has now continued for over a year, with the result that prosperity has replaced idle working conditions, and no price will be considered by the Government too great to insure this peace.

However, the Mussolini program goes a step further. It touches the Italian export trade, and it is hoped that a "solid front in finance, industry, and economy," in seeking foreign markets, will result in reciprocal arrange-ments with other nations, and the elimination of destructive home rivalries. In a word, the Italian Govern-ment will back Capitalism in developing foreign markets, and act as an arbitrator between rival interests in ex-ploiting the home market.

That this experiment in satisfying both Labor and Capital is an ambi-tious one, is self-evident. The wages of the laborer are always a point or two below what he thinks he earns. The profits of the capitalist seldom reach the point where fear of failure Hence the class war. Others besides the disciples of Marx doubt whether the Mussolini program of whether the Mussolini program of guild socialism and industrial syndi-calism enforced by Government regulation will bring permanent indus

There are several points in which the commercial interests of Russia and Canada touch. For instance, last year it was found that it was cheaper to import grain from western Canada into the Russian Far East than to bring the grain by the long overland route from European Russia or western Siberia. Canadian business firms have also shown an interest in the products of the Russian peasant hand industry. The Canadian Racific Railroad is a large shareholder in a Russian-Canadian transportation company. The Cunard line and the Russian state fleet also participate in this enterprise.

Spring-and the Vogue of the Tailleur

Nothing is quite so much in the feminine mind at the moment as the dominance of the tailored suit—the tailored suit in all its slim simplicity, all its slender grace and youthfulness

So, undoubtedly, it will interest everyone to know that here, in this vast repository of Fashion's latest and best ideas, the most authentic presentations of the tailored mode have been thoughtfully assembled. Tailleurs for mondaines; tailleurs for debutantes (and among these latter, models that are especially adapted for women of girlish figure); and in each and every instance the line is correct, and the material chosen for its development is that most appropriate for the purpose.

There are many models, of course. Costume tailleurs, some of them, consisting of coat-and-frock or cape-and-frock; others, a thought more severely tailored, of the coat-and-skirt persuasion, leaving the question of the blouse to be decided later. Of the materials, coverts, charmeen, twills, Oxfords, mannish mixtures and hairline stripes are most frequently used for the severe effects; while for the more elaborate models, Patou crepe and other soft, fine woolens are used, as well as supple silks.

Charming novelties in the Small Furs so necessary for early Spring wear with the new tailleurs are interestingly featured in the Fur Department. Especially chic are the satin-lined cravats of such silky-soft furs as moleskin, squirrel (natural or dyed) and ermine—the latter being particularly effective when worn with the black or black-and-white tailormade. The new slenderized Scarfs, of wolf, fox, mink, stone marten, baum marten and sable. are also most attractive.

orogram of the fourteenth con-the Boston Symphony Orches-tre Monteuz, conductor, given by afternoon in Symphony Hall,

Was:
Brahms—Symphony No. 3 in F major.
Loeffler—"A Pagan Poem."
Strauss—"Death and Transfiguration."
The playing of the orchestra throughout the afternoon was unusually brilliant. It was one of those performance in which audience and orchestra seemed peculiarly sensitive to each other. If the playing aroused the audience to a degree of enthusiasm out of the ordinary, it was also this quick response on the part of the audience which seemed to inspire the players. It was one of those rare occasions on which a perfect sympathy reigned in all parts of the auditorium and the result was one of those memorable performances seemed to inspire the players. It was one of those rare occasions on which a perfect sympathy reigned in all parts of the auditorium and the result was one of those memorable performances for which both listeners and players deserve an equal share of credit.

Such an atmosphere was particularly favorable to Brahms' symphony, et which Mr. Monteux gave a fine reading. It has been said by some that only a man of Teutonic blood can properly understand this music. On the contrary, it has often seemed during the last few years that only a man of Latin race and training has been able to reveal its inner beauties and meaning. Mr. Monteux's readings' of Beethoven, Brahms, and Strauss have certainly been cases in point, and no one who had the good fortune to hear it is likely to forget Mr. Toscanini's "Tristan."

So too with Strauss' "Death and Transfiguration." It may not be denied that much of the thematic material of this piece is vulgar and commonplace, its harmonies often trite, as harmonies go at the present time; and that the orchestration, which at first seemed marvelous (and is so, as a matter of fact) cannot entirely conceal these defects as its novelty wears off; but the lofty conception which inspired the work, the tremendous imaginative power and sincerity which lie back of it make it one of the most appealing and affecting of the composer's worka. It is impossible to listen to it unmoved. Mr. Motte-Lacroix was the planist in Loeffier's "A Pagan Poem." He made his first appearance here last fall, at a recital before the faculty and students of the New England Conservatory of Music, with which institution he is connected. At that time it was said of him in these columns: "Mr. Motte-Lacroix's playing revealed an artist of the highest type. His technical mastery of the instrument is complete, and, more than this, he possesses poetic imagination and musicianly insight." This opinion was not only confirmed, but strengthened, by his playing of vesterday. To be sure, the plano part of Loeffier's "Pagan Poem" did no

But the real curiosity of the audience fastened on the final works—"Catalogue de Fleurs," by Darius Milhaud (said to be its first performance in England), and the suite "Histoire du Soldat." by Stravinsky.

Milhaud's work is exactly what it sets out to be—a florist's catalogue put to music. In effect, a musical squib! Perhaps he got the idea from hearing that Schubert could set a mepu to music. Anyhow, Milhaud executed his Catalogue deftly in a string of quaint little movements where the voice (very sweetly and seriously sung by Esther Coleman) describes "La Violette," "Les Jacinthes," etc., while five instruments (wood wind and strings) play an accompaniment that evokes a sort of pictorial fragrance.

Stravinsky's "Histoire du Soldat" for violit claringt hesseon basso corcompaniment that evokes a sort of pictorial fragrance.

Stravinsky's "Histoire du Soldat" for violin, ciarinet, bassoon, basso, cornet, trombone, and percussion, also in short movements, was otherwise a very different affair. Here a crudely violent tale is developed in music consummately clever, its lines hard with cynicism, its colors fiaring with barbaric callousness. Composed about six years ago as incidental music for a stage production of the "Soldier's Tale," it probably loses significance on separation from its dramatic entourage, but it still succeeds in appearing what it is—one of Stravinsky's most characteristic manifestos.

Something very acceptable came into the civilized cities of the earth when certain hunters of the earth's beasts began to shoot with cameras instead of guns. Splendid spoils are these moving pictures of the wild animals of the world and the beasts of the air, as seen lovingly by their big brothers, the men. Two of these men, with their pictures and their tales, came to London for the December holidays (they had both been here before, for such pictures as theirs are not ephemeral) and behold—they are still here, and for popularity and pleasure they equal anything in town.

First came Major Dugmore with "The Wonderland of Rig Game." Then came Captain Knight with "In the Tree Tops." They came to the Polytechnic Hall, which is now London's key-theater for first-class full-length films of travel and nature, and one of the very few picture houses where one may be sure of the quality of the entertainment paid for.

The "Romance of the Real." the Polytechnic program calls itself. A comprehension of how much we all of us welcome and enjoy this romance, first came with the success of "Nanook," two was paying a return visit to the Polytechnic just before the Christmas attractions began. And truly, it is godd to find solidness, under your feet in-a picture palace; to see on the screen something got honestly, kindly, patiently. What sheer beauty there is, too, in the movements of many animals!—that is, when they are moving securely, and with the dignity of fearlessness, "the grace of courage" as a good book hath it.

Also, like them, he tries a joke occasionally, and like them and like every film lecturer so far heard in London, they are always the same jokes.

About how many wives the nativea have, how seldom they wash, how fleas are found everywhere, and how much women talk. No matter. These remarks are, much less disconcerting than what other travel films with a slightly propagandic flavor offer. In "Through Romantic India." for example, we were calmly told that there were "10,000 born criminals for every British official in the country." But the bad jokes in the three first-rate films described are only momentary flickers of the "Romance of the Reel."

STRENGTHENED AND REFRESHED

Los Angeles, Feb. 1
Special Correspondences
WITH the opening of the art galleries in the new Biltmore Hotel the artists of the west have gained another splendid opportunity to show their work, and one which they have evidently appreciated, since the comprehensive exhibition now on in the main and auxiliary galleries is a thoroughly representative one. Actording to the announcement on the catalogue of the opening exhibit these galleries are "dedicated to the advance-galleries are "dedicated to the advancement of western art," and "aim through its public exhibitions of carefully selected work to stimulate interest and appreciation in the art of representative painters of the west who are rapidly forming a nucleus of a distinctive American school of painting."

The group of 72 paintings is indeed of a quality which may well cause a feeling of pride and hopefulness. Many of them are old acquaintances, having been accorded honors in past exhibitions. The rich setting of the main gallery, which is the principal reception hall of the hotel, agreeably enhances the beauty of the pictures and a fortunate arrangement by which they are hung quite apart from each other, almost in an architectural setting by themselves, increases the pleasure of looking at them.

Debussy and Stravinsky

London, Jan. 25

I OFTEN had a chat with Claude
Debussy during the 12 years 1 knew him. More than once did he express toward me feelings of sympathy which I highly appreciated and now regretfully remember. There are few images I can evoke with greater sadness than his; he had so much more to tell me. Yet there are few that I can recall with a more smiling tenderness. His way of expressing himself in social intercourse was so much his own, his abrupt ways even were so meek, whilst his irony was so biting and so much to the point and his reasoning so sound that, even now, the remembrance of his words and intonations is sufficient to blend together mirth and melancholy.

I repeatedly have had occasion to defend his memory against the represent hyrought against him of forces.

I repeatedly have had occasion to defend his memory against the reproach brought against him of forcing his opinions and even distorting them for the sake of witticism, and of being whimsical, that is to say, of sacrificing sincerity for the sake of pleasantry. I know of no more abaure received the leaves met anyone more ander the semblance of extravagance.

All his views, even when expressed at random, as it were, in the course of a conversation, had the appearance of careful elaboration by meditation, and even when otherwise, they came forth, fully armed, from the very bot-tom of his nature, than which a more consistent one has seldom been found.

A Sensitive Nature

He had been given the reputation of a misanthrope. It is a fact that he cared little for the world or men cared little for the world or men generally. It is owing to such a reputation that, for two years, I did not venture to make his acquaintance. but when I met him I was able to gauge his extreme sensitiveness, as woll as the referement and gentleness had a such as a such as the referement and gentleness had a such as a such as the referement and gentleness had a such as a su well as the refinement and gentleness of his temperament concealed by a demeanor to which a peculiar bashfulness gave an appearance of abruptness. I have had personal proofs of would soon have surprised him. He would soon have distinguished what fulness gave an appearance of absurptions. I have had personal proofs of this, and some of his letters to me would suggest it, if my mind and heart were not here to certify it. But I have often had an opportunity of observing his sensitiveness on occa-sions in which I was not personally concerned, and in a sphere where his susceptibility was naturally keen, namely, music and musicians. He frankly and openly hated certain kinds of music and certain composers. He did not cover his antipathy under the cloak of formulæ. He felt toward them a peevishness which was due not merely to the little pleasure he derived from their works. but to the harm which, in his opinion, but to the harm which, in his opinion, they did to music itself, which he always held in reverence. Behind biting words, vivid similes and witticfsms, he concealed a real worship for his art, about which he was extremely modest for loccasion, he might have made out before those who are indifferent that he was a stranger to music and he might have replied to them as he did to a certain replied to them as he did to a certain painter, whose canvas he disapproved of and where he thought the coloring was not the color of Paradise, which it was supposed to represent. When the painter retorted: "You have been there," M. Debussy."—"Yes, I have been there," he replied, "but I never mention it in front of strangers."

Appreciation of Stravinsky

But nothing appertaining to music was foreign to him; and not only old music, the music of Bach, Chopin and Weber, of which he spoke affectionately, sometimes giving way to a sud-den silence which opened a wide hori-zon of tenderness; but also the music of his own time and music which might have been supposed quite for-

I shall never forget that he was one cle. I believe it was Maurice Ravel and Delage who revealed Stravinsky to me, but very shortly after, I heard Debussy say to me, with his head bowed down and frowning, and his eyes seeking shelter behind his high bulging forehead: "One must hear that music; it is wonderful." And on repeated occasions, he told me, emphasizing the adjective: "His intellect is redoubtable." And on the day folis redoubtable." And on the day fol-lowing the "Rite of Spring," the in-fluence of which he had felt, he utfluence of which he had felt, he uttered without dissimulating his feelings, and full of admiration, those words which I have never forgotten: "However it may be, this is not the way French music will be rendered." In fact, next to his passion for music, I might even say, with it, he had an unalterable passion for French music. He knew our duty toward it and the influence from which we had to save it; and he was rightly afraid of seeing a young generation of French musicians following the footsteps of this "redoubtable Russian genius."

I have often thought of Debussy's appression, when he was telling that expression, when he was telling that —of all the generous admiration be

"I saw Stravinsky recently. He said, 'my "Fire-bird," my "Rite," as a child says, 'my top, my hoop. And he is precisely like a spoiled child who, occasionally, is ill-mannered in dealing with music. He is also a young sayage who wears inordinate pleasantry. I know of no more absurd accusation. I never met anyone more sincere in his opinions, however quickly formed, or more sober-minded under the semblance of extravagance. All his views, even when expressed at random; as it were, in the course of conversation had the appearance.

Amused Sympathy

There is no disparagement to the composer of the "Noces" in saying that he did not wait until he was old not to be able to stand any music but his own. A good riany of us have already observed this for a long time. Be-sides, it seems that Wagner's frame of mind toward the music of others was not very different, even in the case of Liszt, from whom he used to was true from what was sham. He was no dupe and he took good care not to be duped, whilst his taste, however impulsive its manifestation in conversation might be, was the out-come of an extremely shrewd mind, matured and consolidated by reflec-

The New Double

Special Correspondence

HERE was presented in Paris the other day the new plano with double keyboard of Emanuel Moor. When the piano dethroned the clave-cin, it may be argued that it marked a step not toward progress, but toward an impoverishment of the technique of the virtuoso. That is what struck Emanuel Moor and what induced him to undertake the patient researches of which his new piano is the result. The organ, in spite of the numerous possibilities of varying the sonorous scale, possesses not only two but three or four or five keyboards. Why should the piano, which disposes of only one color for each note, be deprived of a supplementary key-irresistibly.

The coupling of keyboards, the adjunction of octaves, are valuable resources for the interpretation of Bach. In the new piano there is a vibration of the sound which recalls the organ. At the same time the sonorous planes become more independent and varied. The interpreter can underline an "entry" without altering the volume and breaking the tering the volume and breaking the equilibrium of the composition. This instrument is a triumph of delicacy and subtle resonance.

She would have an answer for me that would compel surrender. But to illustrate her zeal for the modern cause, I will quote her again. It was a fine winter morning when I called on her at a house just off Riverside Drive. The sun shone in the broad southern windows of the studio, and somehow everything studio, and somehow everything seemed to favor free expression of opinion. The light was clear on my paper as I took notes, and there can be no mistake as to the record. Mme. Freund declared that she considers Schönberg the greatest composer within actual memory. ### Losing the Tune By FUELERTON WALDO

THE course of empire may be westward, but music is independ-ent of national frontlers and boxes ent of national frontiers and boxes the compass as it pleases. A song-hit of Broadway is a rapid voyager that soon makes night melodious in Prague or Constantinople.

Last summer by going to Europe I tried to get away from one of them. The attempt was a failure.

On the Leviathan was a first-class band of second-class stewards, 12 in number. Every one was a German, who had taken out his first naturalization papers in America. Every one was versed in the Tentonic tradition was versed in the Tentonic tradition of classical music.

They came down into the steerage where I was living (to see what the lot of the third-class voyagers is like) and give us a concert. They blew their cheeks purple with Wagner and Beethoven. Their audience was delighted. But the face of the chief steward was heckeded. Something lighted. But the face of the chief steward was beclouded. Something was on his mind. He tapped the leader on the shoulder as the "Tann-häuser" March came to an end.

"Play 'Yes, We Have No Bananas."
he commanded.
When I landed at Southampton, I wanted to believe that the tune that had assailed my ears "from morn till noon, from noon till dewy eve" was left behind and would be deported with the semi-alien bandsmen to America. Alas for the vanity of human wishes! When I left my handman wishes: When I left my hand-luggage at the railway station in Southampton while I went to see friends in the city, the youth in charge was blithely, whistling that

On the homeward voyage, a fellowpassenger aboard the Mauretania was a Welshman, much addicted to music. His name was Lloyd George. He said he was given persistently to under-stand by the ship's orchestra that there was a dearth of bananas.

When we came to Quarantine, we were met by a shipload of Greeks, who flaunted a banner of gratitude to Lloyd George for his efforts in behalf of their country. They had a vociferous and blatant array of tubas. trombones and cornets. It was mak-ing the welkin quiver with a tune appropriate to the occupation of many of those board the vessel, who had abandoned their perishable wares for the day in order to greet the former Prime Minister.

The fact that just before beginning this article the writer heard—seated comfortably at home—the second act comfortably at nome—the second action of "Tristan and Isbide" performed at Covent Garden Opera House, proves that great rerdjustments are also being made in the conditions of musical art. As a sign of the times, perhaps still more significant was the recent experience of hearing music played in Pittsburgh, Pa.—even if the music it-self was not particularly worth hear-

The gramo-phone has similar advantages, and many violinists and cellists have discovered the trick of slowing down the records of famous players to get valuable hints on fingering and bowing. Perhaps that is why the gramo-phone records of certain artists are strangely unlike their concert per-

Servants or Masters Much is being written about the influence of music on those thousands of citizens into whose homes broadcasting is bringing musical art for the first time. Sir Hugh Allen, in a recent address on "Music and the Man in the Street," drew attention to another side of the picture. "The attitude of a majority coming into touch with art," he said, "becomes aggressive. Music may be of the greatest serving. # THE ESTEY PIPE ORGAN

THE GRAND and magnificent melodies which most of us associate with pipe organ music are only one phase of the many sided musical qualities which an Estey Pipe Organ makes available. Equally well does it render the simplest and most delicate themes. Indeed it plays extremely well any kind of music that a carefully trained orchestra can play.

And all this music is at the command of anyone fortunate enough to own an Estey Residence Pipe Organ. Whileacompleteand perfect instrument for the human organist, it may be played also with an auxiliary player, which automatically interprets any piece with all the life, character and feeling that a master organist might give it.

Estey Organs are built for every organ purpose. They are specially and skillfully designed, voiced and proportioned to the place where they are to be played, the concert hall, church, auditorium, theatre or the home.

This work was taken up after the China war by Mr. Arthur Warren Samuels, the author's father. After a diligent examination of the pamphlets of the "Lucasian Conference," he arrived at the conclusion that Burke so far from opposing Lucas, as he is invariably represented as having done, actually supported him. This support, Mr. Samuels declares, took the form of the publication of certain anoffymous pamphlets which "bear unmistakably the impress of Burke's literary style" and "anticinate his method of political and the reader can hardly tall to be struck by the similarity both of style and sentiment which exists between them and Burke's other speeches and writings published beside them.

"Bless my life!" cried the dragon in good nervous English, "What have we here?"

Most primaval dragons have behaved quite otherwise when beset by English knights, so with the anticipation of something new, the reader settles down to follow the fortunes of Sir Jasper. A comfortable conviction is felt that he is not going to have the customary adventures, and this is well founded. Life at the stronghold of the amiable dragon flows on in friendly and beautiful ways.

His visits to his family were infrequent. "When my mother and he did meet," wrote Lady Anne, "their countenance did show the dislike they had of one another, yet he would speak to me in a slight fashion and give me his blessing." "I taught myself basket-making in the first place with the aid of books, and once you have learned to make two or three baskets you can work out a very great variety. When I am doing one I nearly always get an inspiratior for something else. I am very fond of designing for needlework and that makes me keep my eyes open for designs, and even from a carpet I sometimes get an idea.

"I dye all my own cane, and I have always kept to soft colors, though I find that I must do a few things in strong colors for people who like them. I think, however, that one gets ifred of jazz effects, and I much prefer the soft colors with the natural cane. There is a subdued shade of deep turquoise blue that is specially effective with it."

A great bunch of colls of cane in different colors hung on the wall in Miss Armitage's room, and all around were baskets in various shapes in natural cane, with just a little color artistically blended and introduced in the form of a surrounding band and a mottf on the lid.

Miss Armitage picked up a basket in the shape of a low bowl encircled by a band of color of which the outer part was a lovely greenish-blue, and the inner red, orange, and deep blue and purple woven together to give a shot effect. There was a circle of the color on the lid, and the lining was a pongee in a blueish jade. "I tried to put in that basket," she said, "all the colors I could see in an opal. I love experimenting and I suddenly had the idea. The open stitch in the middle of the lid is an Italian pattern, and the plaited hinge was copied from one on a Japanese basket.

"I make work-baskets chiefly and I put in all my own linings, and often fit up the baskets too, but only when they are for orders. In that one I bought the silk for the lining first because I happened to see it and liked it and then I worked out for the basket the coloring that would go with it." The silk was an all-over conventional flower-patterned pongee in soft jade, blue and rose. The basket, in the shape of a squat bowl with a wide lip, had in the center a lid with a circle of colored-cane showing a spiral design in the three tints.

Another basket was of natural cane in a circular low bowl shape, with an in rose and blue on a jade ground. The three colors also mingled in a band surrounding the basket, and in a long

Dining Room Chairs of Good Taste

DERHAPS the chairs more than anything else give character to a dining room. Nothing is more beautiful than a set of genuine old Chippendale chairs, but in these days even a harlequin set—that is, one of which the design of each chair is not identical—will probably cost more than a thousand dollars.

Really good reproductions are also rather expensive. At present Heppel-white chairs are very popular as models for reproductions, as they are considerably smaller than those of Chippendale, the wide seats of the latter making them unsuitable for small dining rooms. In choosing chairs of this description it is advisable to have loose-seated ones, as visable to have loose-seated ones, as when the entire seat is covered in leather the corners wear and give a shabby appearance.

One great advantage of the loose seats is that inexpensive tapestry or poplin can be used for covering them, and, when a new color scheme is required, the seats can easily be recovered at home.

Hide in the natural brownish color is much used just now for chair seats and though it has been very expensive it is falling in price. The various inlations of leather have the great disadvantage that they are cold to the touch, and a more satisfactory substitute is a reproduction of the charming old jaspe-striped horsehair. Cane-backed and cane-seated reproductions of Jacobean chairs are equally popular with those of Heppel-white, and the loose velvet cushions which are often used on them also afford an opportunity for varying the color scheme.

Such chairs as those described make what might be called a "fine" dining room. But in these days those who cannot aspire to fine dining rooms wisely follow a totally different ob-jective and endeavor, with great suc-cess, to achieve something thoroughly quaint and pleasing.

In a quaint room, ladder-backed, rush-seated chairs are both practical and picturesque, and are in some cases improved by little loose cushions covered with cretonne in a Jacobean design, or with velveteen, which, of course, washes beautifully. As things go in these days, reproductions of these chairs, which were first introduced at the beginning of the eighteenth century, are quite inexoil, coal or metals, or building-stone materials. Many women are making pensive.

Begonias for Living Room Windows

WHEN the average woman desires a flowering plant for her living room window she chooses a great man. If the window happens to be one which receives a great amount of sunlight, the choice may prove well made, but as a rule many more flowers will be obtained if a begonia plant be selected instead or the geranium. The race, of begonias, although newer varieties are on the market. The bloss is very large, and there are many species and varieties which can be grown in a window garden, but the kind to be recommended is the small-flowered begonia, which is the easiest to handle and the most generous with its blooms. The flowers in this class are red or rose-colored and appear without cessation for weeks and months. Indeed, instances are often whole year around. The flowers are not extraordinarily showy, but they are grown, their leaves ranging in color from bright green to varie-glass of begonias which make a greated bronze. No plant is easier to propagate, for if a fresh leave with sandy soil except a small many bousekeepers choose. Probably many bousekeep not extraordinarily showy, but they are very cheerful and attractive, and the plants are small enough to be moved about without difficulty.

Ordinary living-room temperatures suit this begonia, which does not object if the mercury drops to 55 degrees at night. The plants like a reasonable amount of sunshine, yet will bloom with but little, although of course they will give only a poor account of themselves in windows which are darkened by trees or other buildings. The more sunlight they get the more brilliantly-colored the flowers will be. These same begonias are excellent for growing in the

Mr. Bakhmetieff, Ambassador for the Kerensky Government, In-curred Most of Responsibilities

Curred Most of Responsibilities

MOSCOW, Jan. 20 (Special Correspondence)—The publication of the report of the Senate committee showing the origin of the Russian debts to the United States Government has evoked lively interest here. It is generally felt that, whatever compromise may be reached on the subject of the pre-war Tarrist debts, it is most unfair to demand that the Soviet Quvernment repay any of the sums which were advanced from the United States Treasury to the Kerensky ambassador, Mr. Bakhmetieff, and expended by him long after the Kovansky regime had fallen and the Soviet Government had repudiated Mr. Bakhmetieff as a representative. The Russian viewpoint is set forth in detail in a leading editorial by Mr. Steklov in the Isvestia.

After ascribing the tone of Hughes' recent statement to a consciousness of weakness and a desire to delay the opening of negotiations between Russia and America, Mr. Steklov continues;

It is clear that Mr. Hughes de-

It is clear that Mr. Hughes de-mands that the Russian people should repay sums which the American and the American Government continued to recognize him. Up to last year it extended him credit. It must not be forgotten that the Soviet Government formally announced that it did not recognize Mr. Bakhmetieff as its representative and warned the American banks against the filegality of honoring his checks.

After declaring that the Soviet Government cannot submit to one-sided dictation in this matter, the writer continues:

continues:

Mr. Hughes goes farther than the most reactionary European governments. Not to mention the fact that America refuses to follow these countries in canceling the war debts, none of these governments ever thought of demanding from us sums which they spent in the cause of intervention and support of the White governments. We believe that even in America very few people will be inclined to support such unheard-of demands. Mr. Hughes must agree to negotiations on a basis of mutuality. And in this case he will not only not venture to demand the repaymant of the expenses of intervention, but he must seriously consider our counterclaims, based on the intervention of the United States in our internal affairs.

To many from outside the State it is puzzling to learn of the position the Bay State has had in the van of America's recently awakened consciousness of the urgency of the timber problem. As is so often the case, the solution of the puzzle is the enterprise and public spirit of a group of, private citizens who saw the need and set about arousing state and local pride, and public spneers.

work out of local politics by giving the state fire warden suits fire warders authority to select all local fire warders. They are also urging that the State and county jointly take over the burden now placed upon the local community, to support forest protection and fire fighting.

Considerable credit for the establishment of the northeastern forest reservations belongs to this association for fits able campaign, conducted in co-operation with other agencies. It sponsored the important act of 1920, by which Massachusetts would be supported to town forests by furnishing the young forest trees free from the state nurseries. The state nurseries now have an output of $500,000 four-year-old trees a year. It is intended that 2,000,000 more shall be soughled to command that the rest shall be set out on the state-purchased lands for reforestation. Since 1920 the State has bought 65,000 idle agrees for timber growing, and has developed nearly a score of state forests. Pictures taken from the report of the Board of Trade in England show that during 1923, motor vehicles and parts to the value of 8,719,765 pounds were imported. This compares with 5,816,454 pounds in 1921 and 6,937,464 in 1922. Of the imports for 1933, 574,073 pounds were re-exported, so that the net figures become 6,146,692 pounds. The exports amounted last year to 3,965,553 pounds against 2,765,539 pounds for 1932 and 4,547,404 pounds for 1921. There were only 392 touring cars exported to British India during 1932. This is because of the almost prohibitive tariff the Government of India has placed on British cars. Australia imported only chassis because of the facilities in the Commonwealth for the manufacture of motor car bodies from the wealth of native timber. New Zealand absorbed 368 British touring cars, which shows a slight increase over the previous year.

SWEDISH RIKSDAG PARTIES EQUAL

Outlook Uncertain, as Votes Are so Evenly Balanced That De-

decision.

The instability of Europe since the war renders times of peace indistinguishable from times of war from the point of view of a neutral state like Sweden. Sweden is justly proud of its century of peace and of its own demonstration that difficulties between demonstration that difficulties between nations as well as those at home can be solved without war. But Sweden has still to steer its ship of state between Scylla and Charybdis. It has lost the protection of the nearness of a great power in the downfall of Germany, and has still the uncertainty of the actions of its age-old enemy, Russia.

There are many kinds of defense advocated. The Conservatives, of course, wish to strengthen the military defense, laying especial emphasis on defense by air. They cite the fact that Soviet Russia, while asking for the course of the course o that Soviet Russia, while asking for a friendly agreement, is nevertheless busy increasing its military forces in the air, as well as on land. The Social Democrats, on the other hand, incline to leave issues, in event of trouble, to be solved by the League of Nations. They prefer to lessen military defense and employ the money thus released.

toward bettering conditions among the lower classes.

The Liberals favor what may be called economic defense. Their program is to lessen taxation and to encourage business enterprise and development of national resources. They complain that taxation levied in the time when the Social Democrats were in power was so exaggerated that business has been to a great extent paralysed, and thus little by little they have defeated their own ends.

Liberal Party Divided

At present the Liberal Party is divided. The Liberal People's Party makes prohibition its platform, and this is what they lay stress upon in the national defense. In his speech at the opening of the session Mr. Lindhard hard said:

I will try to interpret the voices from our inner world of conscience, which, in spite of all, speak to us chosen party members who have the conduct of the real government of our land, Many people wonder why these voices are not louder in parliaments. An author belonging to a great nation recently expressed his surprise at the fine things statesmen say privately, but how emptly they express themselves when appearing as politicians. "In my country," he said, "we often find that the blind lead a people that have sight."

The British Premier, during the at the opening of the session Mr. Lindhagen said:

I will try to interpret the voices from our inner world of conscience, which, in spite of all, speak to us chosen party members who have the conduct of the real government of our land, Many people wonder why these voices are not louder in parliaments. An author belonging to a great nation recently expressed his surprise at the fine things statesmen say privately, but how emptily they express themselves when appearing as politicians. "In my country," he said, "we often find that the blind lead a people that have sight."

The British Premier, during the World War, greeted a congress in Stockholm with the expression of a hope that "the full confidence of a newly created heart and a new spirit of decision would meet the problems of the future."

Certainly we all feel that a revaluation of what is now called practical policy must take place if we are to succeed. Truth has always been the only practical way, Our highest laws tell us that that alone can give us freedom. How can parliaments believe they do better by fearing truth and coldly witness the slow failure of rights.

In the degree it is possible for us to let the spirit lead the material, truth triumph over doctrines, justice over power, conscience over interests, it will be possible for us to succeed in leaving after this session also fruits of the harvest of eternity.

The floor was packed hard, and they had brought an old rug in to sit on, and for some minutes they had been sitting on the rug playing they were Eskimos. But being Eskimos had soon got to be rather monotonous, and although the snow house was a good snow house, it would certainly have been brighter and more homelike if it had had a window.

against the snow house, just where they decided would be a good place for a window, and Mabel drew a line round it with the end of a stick. Then they dug out the snow until they made a round hole through the side of the snow house, and stood the ice window-pane in the hole, and fixed it firmly with snow just the way the painter man puts putty round a real window-pane. And when they had crawled back inside the snow house, sure enough the window let the light in and kept the cold out.

MARKET OPINIONS

J. S. Bache & Co., New York: A reaction may be justified, but in a discriminating market like this one it is possible that, instead of a substantial general celling instituted as to stability and good prospects. There appears to be nothing in sight to threaten the desirability of carefully selected investments.

Hayden, Stone & Co., Boston: It appears to us that there is very little buying of stocks today with the idea of becoming anything like permanent owners. Nearly all the buying is with the expectation of being able to pass the stock along the buying at all times, but today the proportion is unduly large. This process keeps along merrily while money is easy to borrow and while someone else is willing to take stocks, but it does not constitute a healthy condition, and if carried too far cannot but produce a corresponding reaction.

Elmer H. Bright & Co., Boston: Money gives indication of ease, and the invariable relation of money rates to the return on investments a another factor in maintaining good progress while to the pass to be ab

Schirmer, Atherton & Co., Boston: As we have pointed out in these letters recently, stocks have had a big rise from the low of last October, and even assuming that we are in a big bull market, it would not be contrary to past experience to witness a substantial setback from this present level.

MONEY STILL PLENTIFUL ON WALL STREET

Advance in Call Rates Only a Flurry-Financial Review of Week

NEW TORK, Feb. $ (Special)—The took market reacted quite sharply gain yesterday afternoon, as it did uring the corresponding period of the newtons day. Then there was a dissection to attribute the downward and to an unexpected advance in call longs to $15 per cent are like the contract of the period of the pe position to attribute the downward trend to an unexpected advance in call money to 5½ per cent, as well as to developments at Washington. Yesterday, the money market could not be regarded as an adverse factor in the stock market, inasmuch as the renewal rate was only 4½ per cent and funds were obtainable during the last hour of business at 4½ per cent.

With respect to the disposition to attach considerable importance to developments at Washington as factors in the stock market, it is well worth remembering that, while probably they played their part with highly speculative operators in stocks, there always has been, and apparently always will be, an inclination to disregard the probability of frequent reactions when stocks are advancing rapidly and generally. This is what they have been doing for many weeks, with only very moderate and brief setbacks for the list as a whole.

The recession of 1 to 3 points Thursday and again yesterday afternoon was perfectly natural, and may have been only a logical incident in an upward movement that may be continued for some time longer.

Money Still Plentiful

Money Still Plentiful

Money Still Plentiful

It was made perfectly plain yesterday that the 5½ per cent call money quotation represented no more than a flurry in the money market, and a temporary combination of circumstances, rather than a real and lasting change in the money position here or in the country at large.

So far, there is an abundance of funds to finance speculation in stocks, averaging a little more than 1,000,000 shares a day, and to accommodate bankers and investment houses that are placing on the market many millions of bonds and other securities. These firstitutions generally borrow considerable sums of money for short periods, or until such a time as they hope to have distributed their offerings. Borrowing of this kind is always a factor in the money market.

The demand for funds from other sources apparently keeps about the uted their offerings. Borrowing of this kind is always a factor in the money market.

The demand for funds from other sources apparently keeps about the same. Reports are rather frequent that commercial borrowers are paying off their loans, rather than incensing the aggregate of them. So long as business goes ahead at about the present rate, there is not likely to be much difference in the commercial borrowing. As a matter of fact, most of the reports indicate that business is likely to continue at a reasonably good rate.

President Storey, of the Atchison road, when he was in New York a few days ago for the monthly meeting of directors, said that business might be slowed down somewhat by the presidential campaign in industrial districts, but he did not look for a material change in agricultural sections.

Little came-from Washington during the first half of the week to have an effect upon the stock market. On Thursday and yesterday there were indications that sentiment and business here, to some extent, might be unsettled moderately by the, introduction of numerous bills and resolutions in Consess.

Experienced observers in the financial district do not think that much will ever come of them, but their tenor and trend are not liked. This is because it is felt that the introduction of these measures reflects a tendency to carry on investigations rather than to enact helpful legislation.

Of Investigation

If a definite statement could be obtained from the leading oil interests, probably it would be found that they do not look for the investigation now going on at Washington of the naval reserve leases, or any other investigation that may be held, to exert an important and lasting influence upon the oil industry itself. They look for continued prosperity in that line unless production is carried too far.

It is admitted that the effect of these investigations will continue to be felt as a political factor for some time in a direct way, and a little later in an indirect way, in business and the stock market.

The reports by rubber, companies

It is admitted that the effect of these investigations will continue to be felt as a political factor for some time in a direct way, and a little later in an indirect way, in business and the stock market.

The reports by rubber, companies, made public this week, indicate that most of them did not enjoy a satisfactory degree of prosperity during the last few months of 1923. This was due largely to the keen competition and low prices in the tire manufacturing department. The decilining tendency of the prices for rubber shares, together with the preliminary statements of results for last year, would seem to indicate that there will not be special enthusiasm in the near future over the market for rubber stocks.

The report of the Republic Iron & Steel Company for last year, showing a balance equal to $15 a share on the outstanding common stock, together with the preliminary figures of United States Steel Corporation for the same period, that were recently made public, show conclusively that there is no occasion for being disappointed over the results in the steel industry last year. On the whole, the outlook is encouraging for it this year. The preliminary estimate of the unfilled tonnage of at least 200,000 tons, compared with the end of December.

increase of at least 200,000 tons, compared with the end of December.

Japanese Loan

There is much talk now in banking circles about the forthcoming Japanese loan which, according to the latest predictions, may be for the large sum of $250,000,000. There is some difference of opinion whether it will be a quick and decided success. Manufacturing interests sincerely hope it will be, because it is understood that much of the proceeds of the American share will be spent in this country for materials for reconstruction work. The ateal industry is expected to profit from this more than any other single interest in the stock market in the next few weeks, except in professional trading circles, where there is always more peasimism then optimism, important observers admit that general conditions are such and the possibilities of the presidential campaign are such that prices for stocks may be affected from day to day considerably, and that there may be largely what is called a trading market. This means that speculators buy only moderately, with an idea of selling on a small margin of profit. From the stock market point of view, there is really nothing distinctly discouraging.

is plenty of inquiry for tops and yarns and a fair amount of business is being transacted at slightly less than re-placement costs.

Users are operating with caution but in view of the continued strength of the primary markets, sellers are very firm. At recent rates substantial orders for piece goods have been booked by Japan. Quotations for tops are unchanged.

WEEK'S REVIEW OF CHIEF EVENTS IN BRITISH FINANCE

Growing Demand for Credit a Feature-Many New Issues. Are Coming Out

By Cable from Monitor Bureau

LONDON, Feb. 9-The controlling feature of this week's financial situation here has been the growing demand for money, which has hardened discount rates and pushed charges for day-to-day loans to over 3 per cent. It dents at one bank meeting after an-terests were credited with selling wheat, taking advantage of the crippled wire service to depress the market while the bulls were unable to bring in their usual buying reinforcements.

Cotton traders, who are credited with being the heavy owners of wheat, were credited with selling stocks and cotton and it was thought that they were letting go of some wheat also. The market withstood the selling in good shape.

Country offerings of wheat have increased a little and the winter wheat points have had more than a year ago, but spring wheat arrivals have been light. trade has begun to revive.

The latest witness to this has been Beaumont Pease, chairman of Lloyds Bank, who defends British bankers from blame in connection with last year's slump on the grounds, firstly, that the depression has not been contact the depression has not been contact that the depression has not been contact that the depression has not been contact the depression has not ned to this country; secondly, that it associated with a reduction in the nsumers' effective purchasing power.

Demand for Credit Growing

but spring wheat arrivals have been light.

Demand for Credit Growing

Bankers point out that they can only create credits when the demand for them exists, which was not the case until the close of last year. Now demand is increasing owing to the trade revival, though the limit of the banks' capacity in this respect has not yet been reached. Meanwhile, as the Federation of British Industries points out in the latest bulletin, the cost of raw materials is rising thereby bringing in industrial buyers who previously were holding off for fear that the bottom had not been reached.

In the stock market here movements have been irregular, the general rise in securities in the beginning of the week having been overdone, while the resultant setback toward the close was increased by the dock strike threat and alarmist reports of the extent of the Labor Government's commitments upon social reforms, and especially on housing, which has been estimated as high as £40,000,000 annually by itself.

The Health Minister's recent financial surrender to the Poplar Board of Guardians in the matter of allowances to unemployed has been another bear feature, though this has since been discounted by the official explanation that it does not imply any alteration in the general poor law policy.

That apprehensive investors still have severed the war, during the short gilt-edge boom. Here the attraction is that they are transferable at the holder's option of Cape Town register. The demand also has been increasing for French goods on a long credit basis, to enable buyers to profit if the franc goes lower.

Sentlment Is Cheerful Despite these features the general atmosphere here is cheerful witness.

Sentiment Is Cheerful

to market prospects, being of the opinion that the better roads will bring a final winter run of corn that will temporarily test the capacity of the market to absorb it. At the present, however, the movement is not burdensome. Some export business in. corn is claimed with sales at the Atlantic seaboard and also some in the west via the gulf. Outside interest in both wheat and corn was increasing at the time the storm demoralized communication channels. Both the leading agrains not only had advanced to the best price levels in a long time with July and September wheat as well as the May and July corn making new high season's prices, but the trade volume had widened to an extent that permitted free profit taking without materially disturbing prices.

Oats löngs toog profits on a big scale, and the new buying of this grain was of small proportions. Despite these features the general atmosphere here is cheerful, witness the sudden spurt which has taken place atmosphere here is cheerful, witness the sudden spurt which has taken place in new issues. Those of the week include £2,000,000 Western Australian Government 5 per cent inscribed stock at 98, repayable in 1945, also £1,250,000 Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company 6 per cent second mortgage bonds at 98. Other issues impending are understood to include the Japanese Government long-dated loan of some £60,000,000 to be placed partly in New York and partly in London, to yield something over 6½ per cent; also £1,000,000 loan which the Lithuanian Government has asked the British Government to guarantee for purchases of railway materials here. A new Indian Government loan is also mentioned, besides several for industrial concerns. An encouraging factor in the situation comes from Ireland in the form of a notification of the raising of the dividend of the Great Northern Railway for the last year to 5½ per cent, a material witness to the recovery which is taking place across the Irish sea.

Owing to the repayment of £18,000,000 war bonds last week, the British Government's floating debt has been further increased by £13,000,000 to £840,000,000, which is £30,000,000 more than the corresponding total on March 31 last. This increase connotes more than the corresponding total on March 31 last. This increase connotes an arrest of the much criticized British deflationary policy previously in opera

WHOLESALE DRY GOODS
CHICAGO, Feb. 9—The John V. Farwell Company's review of the wholesale dry goods trade says: Wholesale dry goods business is reflecting retailers' increased interest in spring lines with greater activity in goods for atonce shipment. Road orders are running about even with the corresponding week of last year in volume. NATIONAL BANKS' RESOURCES WASHINGTON. Feb. 9—Despite a reduction in the number of reporting banks of 55 since Sept. 14, 1923, and a reduction of 41 since Dec. 29, 1922, aggregate resources of reporting banks Dec. 31, 1923, were $22,406,128,000, an increase since Sept. 14 of $693,252,000, and of $481,171,000 in the year.

Tis We Who Are the Ancients"

The present distinction between ancient and modern is comparatively recent, going back only to the temporary sway of neo-classicism of the seventeenth and early eighteenth centuries, when the "ancients" were held up as the final models of achievement in the arts, which would never be equaled again. In spite of the triumph of the classical revival a century or so earlier this dominating conception did not establish itself without a struggle. In France the confroversy over the relative merits of "ancients" and "moderns" was termed "La querelle des anciens et des moderns," and in England "The Battle of the Ancients and the Moderns." The victory lay with the "ancients" for some time and although the romantic movement reversed the decision, the theory with its sweeping implication remains firmly imbedded not only in our language but even in conventional thought. In other words, we retain the terms whose only possible meaning we repudiate. The present distinction between

This very inconsistency was most renchantly emphasized in the thick of the controversy by two of the keenest writers of the seventeenth century, Pascal and Fontanelle. Both insisted that the only logical analogy is between the lifetime of the individual and the age of the race. "We are in the old age of the world and of philosophy," they declared, "what we call antiquity is infancy and youth." The ancients, therefore, were beginners, mere tyros, and exhibit all the cruditles and errors of youth. We are in their debt, of course, because we have all the advantage of their achievements upon which we can build and improve; and we can be warned by all their errors and shortcomings. of the controversy by two of the keen-

Such a forceful position rests obviously upon one vital premise: we are intellectually the equals of the men of earlier ages. And this Fontanelle

there are new lands, new men, new thoughts."

These utterances have now become the view of the past century. So motivation of thought and conception, so vital in motivation of thought and conception, so vital in motivation of thought and conception, so vital in motivation of thought and conceptions, established in the neo-classical period. The latest development in the view of the age of the race is the cased it, and his followers had decreased it repeatedly. Malebranche, instance, wrote: "Reason re-grasses begin their growth. Many push their way out through the last remaining drift, and great fields of bright-colored blossoms step on the very heets of the retreating snow banks. There is no distinct tree line on the mountain. Small patches of low, weather-beaten and stunted mountain hemlock, alpine fir and white bark pine occur up to seven thousand feet. A few diminutive hemlocks grow above this elevation. Their crowns are broad mats of branches, fiattened by the weight of their winter burden.

While the great drifts of snow make a colorless landscape, the mountain never remains the same on two suc-

youth of the world, those who live to-day are in very truth the ancients, and must consequently be more important." In the light of our prevalling view of the worship of the classic ideal throughout all the thought of le grand siecle, we can but he astonished to find the repeated declaration, "C'est nous qui somme les anciens." + + + But it was none other than Bacon who provided these accomplished French controversialists with the most clear-cut and final statement. In the "Novum Organum," of 1620, he set forth the case thus: "The opinion which men cherish of antiquity is altogether idle, and scarcely accords with the term. For the old age and increasing years of the world should in reality be considered as antiquity, and this is rather the character of our own times than of the less advanced age of the world in those of the ancients; for the latter, with respect to ourselves, are ancient and elder, with respect to the world, and elder, with respect to the world, modern and younger. And as we expect a greater knowledge of human affairs, and more mature judgment from an old man than from a youth, on account of his experience, and the variety and number of things he has seen, heard and meditated upon, so we have reason to expect much greater things of our own age (if we knew but its strength and would essay to exert it) then from antiquity, since the world has grown older and its stock has been increased and ac-cumulated with an infinite number of experiments and observations.

. + + + Three hundred years later Hazlitt spoke out with his usual impatient eloquence against a supine acceptance of the superiority of antiquity: "The accumulation of knowledge has been so great," he averred, "that we are fost in wonder at the height it has reached, instead of attempting to climb or add to it; while the variety of objects distracts and dazzles the looker-on. What niche remains un-occupied? What path untried? What is the use of doing anything, unless we could do better than all those who have gone before us? What hope is there of this? We are like those who quires, that we judge Aristotle and plate more ignorant than recent philosophers, since in the time in which we live, the world is older by two thousand years and has more experience;" and another now forgotten disciple, la Mothe le Vayer, contended that "since the ancients lived in the youth of the world thousand years, and another now forgotten disciple, la Mothe le Vayer, contended that "since the ancients lived in the youth of the world thousand years."

This fine old world of ours is but a child youth of the world thousand years. Patiencel Give

Yet in the go-cart. Patience! Give it time To learn its limbs: there is a hand that guides.

This clarifying vision of the poet affords happy relief from the tangle of definition and dispute in which we tarry too long. Ancient or modern: what boots it, so long as our faith in the onward movement endure?

The world's great age begins anew The golden years return, The earth doth like a snake renew Her winter weeds outworn.

Another Athena shall arise. And to remoter time Bequeath, like sunset to the skies, The splendor of its prime.

More About Basho

Basho insisted that honesty and sim-plicity in living were the necessary plicity in living were the same virtues—the essential virtues—in writing. In fact, his ethical and literary teaching were one, and expressed in the same words. To reprove any word or act that seemed to him wrong, "This is not hokku." Apparently the phrase—"This isn't poetry"—was used in seventeenth-century Japan just as one says in English, "That isn't cricket. One of the well-known anecdotes one of the well-known anecdotes about Bashō must be given, for the sake of the poem of which it is the setting. On a journey to some out-of-the-way corner of Japan where he was still known by reputation only, a pleasing diversion from the daily Bashō was tramping at night along round of duties and bring news from sake of the poem of which it is the setting. On a journey to some out-of-the-way corner of Japan where he was still known by reputation only. Basho was tramping at night along a mountain road, when he came to a tea-house where the local poets were gathered on the little three-foot wide verandah, mildly feasting and composing hokku in celebration of the full moon's glory. The way-worn nil-

the Paradise valley of glaciers and wild flowers, old Mount Rainier gathers his cloak of storm clouds about his face and slumbers until the warm breath of summer dispels the blizzards, and carpets of flowers are spread in its welcome.

To the dweller in distant view of the Great White Mountain its face changes little from season to season. The tale is told to him by a gradually lengthening snow line and the softening of its rugged outline.

But to the innkeeper who dwells in tage point, must don snowshoes and depart from the beaten track. He will climb past the great Nisqually glacier at whose base a feeble trickle replaces the broad, milky stream of late sumper. He will pass through the property of the prope with glittering burdens. At last, he will stand in an open valley, broken here and there by half-buried hemlocks. Above, so near that it appear to be toppling upon him, is the Great White Mountain, heavy with the snow of years.

If his eyes are keen, perhaps the traveler will detect a ridgepole, rising a foot or two above a snowdrift. Prospects of shelter under that ridgepole look doubtful until, prestol a longlegged guide appears out of the snow bank. He ushers the astonished trav-eler down a precipitous tunnel that is the use of doing any.

We could do better than all those who have been to see some notice mount and the rest may be sun, toolish!" So Bashō quietly seemant of art, who are content to adhave been to see some notice mount ments of art, who are content to adhave been to see some notice mount ments of art, who are content to adhave been to see some notice mount again:

Paris, haif asleep in the warm summer months, awakens suddenly in October. Blinds go up, lights go on, one lives in a state of perpetual surprise. Each day one discovers bookshops, theaters, antique stores, of whose existence, during the dormant season, one had not even been aware. volumes of some eighteenth century poet, apparently unconscious of the proprietor who understandingly ig-nores his visitor.

But not all strollers confine their interest to arts and letters. One can practice the art of the flaneur as well among the tiny grocery stores of the Latin quarter as among its bookstalls. One may derive artistic pleasure from the orderly array of figs, pome-granates, grapes and fresh English walnuts at the open windows of the trim little épicerie. And since a Frenchman is never too dreamy to be practical, he remembers the dinner needs of his family in his strolling. Young girls are running about with long, unwrapped loaves of bread, gathering last minute necessities for the evening meal. The stroller buys his long, crusty loaf, and with an Intransigeant bought from a little old woman who has sold newspapers on this corner for many, many autumns, and a bunch of gold chrysanthemums purchased from the flower girl across he street, he turns his leisurely was homeward, as a gust of October wind blows a bevy of yellow leaves from a small tree upon the boulevard.

The Rise of Popular Music

The fountain source of all was, of course. Bach. When Bach had shown the way, there was a surge and uprush the way, there was a surge and uprush of pure music in Central Europe to which nothing in the history of other arts can be compared, unless it be the building of the French cathedrals. It was as if a vast gold mine had been discovered, opening out to those happy mortals who had first right of entry long galleries of metal, precious and pure; nor did they waste their matchless opportunity, but tirelessly worked on, minting in streams a beautiful clear coinage which was good in all the markets of the world. Of almost all the great composers of the nineteenth century fertility is the conspicuous trait; they were limited only by the capacity of the'r hands to

In every self-governing country, if its business is to be conducted efficiently and honestly with measurable regard for the general welfare, there must be an active public

The Public Conscience Revealed regard for the general welfare, there must be an active public conscience expressing itself in an intelligent public opinion. This is particularly true in the United States, where probably more than in any other democratical expressions.

racy the management of the Nation's affairs depends on the people's will exerted through political channels. There have been long stretches of time in the ordinary course of politics in the United States when it seemed as if too many men in public office forgot their responsibility to the people, and when it looked as if the voters were indifferent to their own interests. So much has this been the case, in fact, that pessimistic observers are not a little justified in declaring that politics has always been debased, that the people never will take an active and alert part in their government, and that there really never has been such a thing as a public conscience. Events at Washington just now, for example, are such that the pessimists are wagging their heads and insisting, "We told you so!" Their inference is drawn from the surface of things.

A little analysis of what is going on below the noisy circumference of the Teapot Dome will show, however, that they are wrong. What is the most evident, spectacular, and striking feature of the outburst over the oil reserves? Is it not the revelation of panic created among numbers of political leaders and their immediate followers, who ordinarily do not show much concern for exhibitions of public impatience or anger? It is doubtful if the oldest inhabitant in Washington remembers a time when there were such marked exhibitions of fright as have been patent lately at the national capital. A public official has admitted on the witness stand that both he and an employee of an oil company were "scared" and that their actions thereafter had been governed by that fright. Party leaders, calming down somewhat in the face of the courageous demeanor and action of President Coolidge, have shown the plain signs of political terror.

Of what have these politicians and oil company men been afraid? Of nothing whatever except an aroused public conscience and the power of public opinion stirred to action. They have known all the time, while seemingly oblivious to its existence, that this public conscience was there. What has frightened them to the verge of panic is their own fear that events which could not be covered with smoke screens or explained away with subterfuges would inflame that conscience to such action as could not be diverted with red herrings or prevented by the raising of confusing or false issues.

The fright, then, that has been so vividly exhibited in Washington reveals clearly two straight and open paths which it is the duty of both political leaders and the public to follow. If the politicians wish to preserve and strengthen their party organizations, they must remember that there is such a thing as a public conscience, all powerful and ready for swift action, and that the only sure basis for the success of their organizations is that same public conscience.

If the people at large, the women voters, the millions of church members, really want high morality and efficiency in official life; if they really want world peace instead of war; if they actually prefer the reign of good will and fair dealing in both national and international affairs, they can get them all quickly. How? By demanding them, and by letting those servants, to whom they have intrusted their public interests, know constantly that the individual and collective consciences of the Nation are not dormant, but are alert and ready for action.

LEIGHTON STUART, president of Peking University, tells New York something that is not news to Western

A Fundamental Balance to China's Ledger readers, namely, that there "is not a single gleam of light in the political gloom" of China. He sees a situation compact of financial chaos, universal dishonesty among the parliamentarians and officials, and general lawlessness through the greater part of the country. He goes on to declare, however, that he is not discouraged, and that he is going back to work harder than ever to play his part in the governmental salvation of this one-sixth of the human race. How can the two statements be made to harmonize? The hopefulness of this experienced missionary-educator springs not from temperamental optimism merely. It is based on a recognition of fundamental facts, such as usually is found only among those whose intimacy has been longest with the chaos we call China and who intend to continue indefinitely in their work. Of course, they are right. The consensus of their opinion is more than just good reading: it is an accurate forecast of a not less than inevitable result. They do not pretend, naturally, to even guess as to when the result is to come to pass, but quite clearly they see the how.

The reason for the faith that is in them may be set. forth in some such way as this: pro balanced off against con. The debit page of China's great ledger carries heavy entries. There is utter lack of political cohesion. There is no popular interest in public affairs. The eighteen provinces are burdened by as many local tuchuns, self-seeking men of "strong-arm" proclivities, mutually hostile in the main, though all are set against a restoration of efficient central government.

It is exactly here, in what is possibly the worst phase of the dark picture, that those who know China best and longest take hope. They realize the splendid character of this same people, now handicapping all efforts to aid them by their utterly wrong "none-of-my-business" attitude. Once educate them to realize that the national concern also is the personal concern of every individual, and no least room for doubt as to the ultimate outcome will be left. For one deals here with a race which for steadiness and sense, honesty and thrift, knows no superior the globe around. Already a number of "real men" have arisen from the laissez faire camp, as if to put new heart in their country's friends, and these show what may be expected when the awakening shall have become a broad and deep movement.

Another asset entry of truly real promise is to be read in the existence of the National Chamber of Commerce: the character of its membership and the work which already it has accomplished. Here is an interest even now thoroughly organized, reaching out and down from the national body, sitting at Shanghai, to the lesser chambers throughout the land—more than 800 of them, with nearly a quarter of a million firms represented and close to 10,000,000 individuals immediately concerned.

"China" may stand to the scholar as the most ancient of old civilizations. The word may convey to another type of thought the richest reservoir of the world's future resources. To a third observer it stands for the very acme of political corruption and governmental lawlessness. But to yet a fourth student of affairs it means the state in all the six continents where we are to see the most surprising (and most surprisingly good) working out of the present era's "popular experiment."

ADVOCATES of such a modification of the prohibition enforcement code of the United States as will permit

Specious Pleas for Wine and Beer the United States as will permit the sale, legally, of alcoholic beverages of a content greater than that now prescribed, seek to avoid the certainty of offending the public, were they to urge a return of the saloon. In an address delivered before the Women's Republican Club of Massachusetts recently, Mr. Julius Codman, a director of the Constitutional Liberty League of the same State, argued eloquently in opposition to the present prohibition law, urging that the people of the Nation must "return to the states themselves the decision as to whether they shall permit the sale of wine and beer by the bottle to their citizens."

The fact was not mentioned by the speaker that the states, by their voluntary action, have willingly agreed to share with the federal Government the task of prohibiting, by every lawful means in their power, the manufacture and sale of these very things. He failed to show, however, that his own Commonwealth, with a few others, has failed to co-operate in the undertaking entered upon.

Mr. Codman presented a long bill of indictment against the law, and then confided that there were "many other evils of prohibition" on which he had not touched. Some of these he enumerated as "its degrading effect upon the youth of both sexes, especially," as he put it, "those of the more 'fortunate' classes." Then he spoke of what he declared to be its like degrading effect upon enforcement officials and the police of the various states. He regretted the losses in revenue suffered by the Government, not mentioning the fact that, from a purely economic point of view, that revenue, when collected, actually represented a loss to the people as a whole, counting dollars alone, many times greater than the apparent returns in cash.

'What," he asked, "is the remedy for all this?" Then he proceeded to answer the question himself, apparently to his own satisfaction. He said: "Is it more law enforcement? Clearly not. We have come to the point where we must admit that we have made a mistake. We must try to save the one good thing which has been given us by prohibition—that is, immunity from the old saloon. But we must amend the Volstead And yet in the same breath he pleads, circumstantially, for the return of the saloon. The sale of wine and beer will re-establish the saloon on every second block in the business sections of every American city in which the traffic in such beverages is legalized. It is in the destruction of the saloon and its influences that the American people have taken a great forward step in ending the poverty and crime which the saloon imposed and encouraged. The saloon without intoxicants for sale across its bar or over its counter in the form of bottled beverages is no more harmful than a grocery stone or a stationer's shop.

The speaker told his audience of women that the "repressive and oppressive provisions" of the law must be repealed. Possibly he meant that they must be nullified. But is any moral and legal code which is based upon the fundamentals of a democratic form of government either repressive or oppressive? It establishes an accepted standard of ethics. Opposition to it, no matter by whom, does not brand that law as oppressive or repressive. A right has been declared and established, not that oppression may thus be legalized, but that greater freedom may be enjoyed.

Nor alone in the United States, but in every country in the world in which a postal service is in operation, the employees demanded for it are necessarily such as are capable of a high grade of work. In the United States at the present time, however, and ignoring the problem in other countries, the wages being paid are, to put it very mildly, extremely modest. It is, therefore, not to be wondered at that a movement is on foot to obtain for them higher pay and better working conditions. This has crystallized in proposed legislation now before Congress whereby the present salary scale shall be raised somewhat commensurately with the increased cost of living in recent years.

Postal Employees

The reasonableness of this movement may be seen in the fact that the present salary raises are the same which were asked for and recommended by a joint congressional commission in 1920. At that time it was commonly felt that the cost of living would soon decrease. This, of course, it has not done, at any rate to the extent that was then expected, and thus the employees for the last three years have been receiving a salary which has been recognized as insufficient for their needs.

The increased salaries, moreover, which are now asked for, have been indorsed by the efficiency men employed by a subcommittee of the House Post Office Committee to investigate every phase of departmental expenses. The men do not, however, ask that they shall be fixed on the basis of present price levels, but are willing to make allowances for any ordinary reduction in prices.

All of this is entirely aside from the question of efficiency. It is claimed, for example, that the morale of the service has been impaired by retaining the reduced entrance requirement instituted during the war period, the annual turnover in the department running as high as 22 per cent. That some adjustment which would be fair to the employees and satisfactory to all parties involved is needed is certain, and it is reasonable to hope that such a solution to the problem will be worked out.

To sing in harmony, Dr. Henry van Dyke declared at a meeting and concert of the People's Chorus of New York, is an achievement possible only to himan beings. When Dr. van Dyke made the observation, he evidently desired, first of all, to place music on as high a plane as might be in the thought of the audience assembled before him in the parquet and balcony of the hall; and, after that, to pay a compliment to the members of the chorus gathered on the platform behind him. Accordingly, he should not be taken so literally as he would have to be if he put himself on record in the matter in permanent print. Again, he may have assumed for the time being a definition of harmony that more or less begged the question. That would be a liberty which he, as a man of letters, tliscussing a technical subject outside his usual range of investigation, could well be imagined as taking. And yet, he is an honorary officer of the People's Chorus; and as such, he may hardly be supposed to entertain a too special and personal notion about the meaning of musical terms. So that, after everything is allowed for that ought to be on grounds of informality and extemporaneousness, his reported remark may be considered as

Now Dr. van Dyke may or may not regard himself an authentic writer on nature, in the way of White, Thoreau, and Jefferies. But he is so far an accepted source of information on the larger concerns of out-of-doors that any opinion which he may imply, to say nothing of express, must attract notice. When he says, therefore, that only human beings sing in harmony, he the same as avers that birds do not. That being the situation, it stands him to tell how the medley that awakens him on a June morning in his mountain camp is to be described. Of course, the chirps, peeps, and twitters do not marshal themselves on a scheme of chords corresponding to anything in Palestrina or Bach. Query may be made, however, whether they do not now and then fall into one resembling what is found in Stravinsky.

If Dr. van Dyke conceives harmony as tones arbitrarily spaced in pitch, balanced in volume, and regulated in number, as they are in the performance of a four-part choir in an old-fashioned singing school, his view is perhaps not to be disputed. But, really, choral singing, in whatever manifestation, is no more harmonic than solo singing. For any good solo air has chords for its structural basis. And if the woodland ensemble, when in action, is a jumble of sounds rather than a logical design of concords and dissonances, there exist single bird voices which are as harmonic as anything in the theoretical treatises of Albrechtsberger and Prout. Take one of the intervals employed by the chicadee in his two-note song. It is acknowledgedly a minor third, capable of development into a whole national repertory of folk tunes. Take, too, the variant of the song-two notes a full tone apart. What, Dr. van Dyke may be asked, is it but the major ninth and its resolution, upon which Wagner bases so many of his themes?

A CENTENARY of more than usual interest, which is to be observed this year in Durban, Union of South Africa, is the arrival of European settlers in Natal. It was in 1824, that is, that about forty men sailed from Cape Town in two vessels, the Julia and the Ann, under the leadership of Mr. H. F. Fynn and Lieut. F. G. Farewell, R. N., respectively, with the object of settling this region. They were joined the next year by a number of others, most of whom, however, returned, for by 1828 only seven were left. Incidentally, it may be news to some that Durban, which was laid out in 1835, is named in honor of Sir Benjamin d'Urban, who was at that time Governor of the Cape.

Secretary Hoover's opinion, recently expressed, that the British Labor Party would maintain its control of affairs for from three to four months, after which the Liberal Party would come into power, fortunately needs only that length of time before being proved either true or false. Unlike so many forecasts which date far into the future, this one will still be fresh in thought when the time of its predicted fulfillment arrives. Then Mr. Hoover will stand forth either as an unusually brilliant political prognosticator or as one whose guess was no better than hundreds of others.

It is true that many mispronunciations of English words are passed by without comment. Still, when a distinguished British scholar refers specifically in an address to such a common word as "often" and indicates that its pronunciation should not be "awfn," as it is given in the Concise Oxford Dictionary, one begins to wonder who is to be considered as authority. Incidentally, this same dictionary refers to the pronunciation "of-ten" as "vulg," and yet that, it appears, is the pronunciation favored by the gentleman in question, "Who shall decide, when doctors disagree?"

Passport Perplexities By MARC T. GREENE

WHEN, in July, 1920, the American Government decided to raise the fee charged for an alien visa, from $2 to $10, a storm of protest arose all over Europe, and American consular officials encountered everything from curious and satirical questions to downright abuse. Why was this high charge made? it was demanded; and why were passports needed any more at all, since the war-born necessity for them no longer existed?

Those were questions which no one was able to answer with any degree of conviction; and foreign governments, feeling themselves distinctly aggrieved, even if they did not say so in so many words, proceeded very speedily to measures of retaliation. Every country in Europe, except two or three of the smaller ones, increased the fee for the visaing of an American's passport from a sum which had been very nominal to another equal to the $10 which America was charging the immigrants from all countries. And this most reactionary of developments came at a time when negotiations should have been in progress between all governments for the abolishment of the assence allowether.

To "visa" a passport means simply to place upon it a verification stamp, indicating that the bearer has been seen personally by an official of the country into which he purposes to enter, and that he is regarded as a suitable immigrant, or temporary visitor. It is, in effect, the official's recommendation of the bearer of the passport, though that recommendation is, and in the nature of things can be, based on nothing but the most cursory investigation and questioning. As a real guaranty of the character and standing of the passport holder it is not worth a one-hundredth part of $10. And so far as entrants into America are concerned, it has about that degree of weight, for the fitness of the newcomer is passed upon, as conditions are at present, almost wholly by the officials who examine him in America.

This $10 fee, then, is open to charges of unfairness from the viewpoint of the immigrant. But, what is more important to Americans, it is to all intents and purposes paid by Americans, and paid many times over. A moment's reflection will make that quite clear. And it will reveal, too, the real reason why the passport expense and annoyance should be terminated, for it reacts upon the American traveler in a degree more than offsetting the considerable financial gain to the American Government.

Let us suppose that a citizen of the United States desires to go abroad, for business or for pleasure. In the first place he is required to pay $10 for his American passport, and in many instances, to go to a great deal of trouble to obtain it as well, many proofs of this and that being demanded of him. Assuming, then, that he is visiting five of six European countries, he must visit their representatives in America to obtain visas. It is not unlikely that some traveling about may be necessary to do that; but in any case the sum of $10 is collected by each one, with the exceptions now of Switzerland and Belgium, which have concluded that the good will of visitors is more important to them than the money formerly demanded.

It is highly probable, therefore, that the American traveler will pay nearly $100 before his papers are in order for his visits to foreign lands. If his traveling is to be extensive he will assuredly pay twice that amount; and in Germany, at least, one visa is good for only one passage of the frontier; other visits will cost additional payments. Every American consular official abroad in any land has had exhibited to him passports borne by his countrymen, adorned with well over $200 worth of the visa stamps of foreign governments. Not in a single instance would these stamps have cost the equivalent of $10 each had the American Government not placed the same burden upon immigrants and visitors to the United States.

Nor does this begin to comprehend the extent of the annoyance, the time, or even the expense, involved in the present system of passports and visas. Woeful tales of delays at frontiers, browbeating by minor officials, and endless petty "grafting," have been related over and over by American travelers for the past five years. What has been undergone by visitors to Europe, especially by women traveling alone, is incredible. The spirit of retaliation for the $10 visa charge which America announced in 1920 has been manifested in many other ways than in the increase by foreign governments.

No national of any government under the sun pays to any other government but to that of the United States, anything like $10 for a passport verification. Nor does any citizen but the citizen of the United States pay his own government any such amount as $10 for his own passport, when he plans to go abroad. To the Englishman the charge is less than the equivalent of $1; in other countries it is even less. Yet the charge of $10 for a passport to an American, annoying as it is, is by no means the first thing that should be done away with, for it is the least of the expenses that the traveler from the United States must endure. There never has been, and there is not now, any obstacle in the way of speedily consummating arrangements with all countries for the fixing of a nominal visa fee, a fee which should be the equivalent of $1, and no more. And with England, and probably with other governments, conventions could easily be established eliminating the passport altogether. The present system is indefensible in theory or practice. It brings to the Treasury of the richest country in the world a few more millions a year from immigrants and visitors; but it takes those millions, and probably more, if the figures could be determined, directly out of the pockets of Americans themselves.

World Art and World Peace

ART is an international speech, declares Rockwell Kent in The World Tomorrow. In proof of this he writes that "our fondness for France may be traced, in considerable part, at least, to our knowledge of French art and the predominating influence it has had upon American artists. Long before the Russian Revolution we had begun to know something of Russian life from the novelists. Turgenieff, one may say, was not Russian but European. But that cannot be said of Dostoievsky, or Tolstoy, or Gogol. They are wholly Russian and they reveal the Russians to us as a sweet and sensitive people. And now we are beginning to regard the Chinese and the Japanese with deepening respect as an increasing public comes to know the beauty of their art. The traditions of their thought and art are different from our own; but even with little understanding one is moved to reverence. Incidentally, it is only in the last few years that we have known the tragic blunder of the Spaniards in wiping out the great Inca and Aztec civilizations of Peru and Mexico. If we embroil ourselves in the Far East ours will be a similar blunder.

ours will be a similar blunder,

"Each nation, each race, expressing itself with integrity, makes a contribution which will be understood by others. The artist must follow the solitary path of his own genius, for in that loyalty to himself and the traditions of his race he commits that truth which leads to understanding."
